At some point in your formal education you will ask yourself the important question where will I find a job and maybe even more importantly you will ask what are my job options. The US Labor Department estimates that the majority of employees will spend less than 4 years at an employer before leaving. At one time a recent college graduate could anticipate working for one company for 30-40 years before retiring. This is no longer the standard. Not only will new graduates change jobs more frequently but at the current rate over 75
