Carbon Nanotubes as Nucleobase Sensors LEIF POORMAN, University of California, Santa Cruz — We compute the conductance change of a carbon nanotube when one nucleobase is adsorbed. Different bases cause similar, but potentially distinguishable, conductance changes. We discuss possible applications of this effect in DNA sequencing.